WILLIAM ELMER (BILLY) WILLIAMSON AND FAMILY

Eula Williamson Kelly

William Elmer Williamson, who was known by all as Billy Williamson, was born December 12, 1864, in Madison County, Ohio. His Mother, Lide Gill, died when he was three years old. Later Joseph Williamson, his father, moved to Nebraska with Billy and his brother, Theodore Edward. There he attended school and grew to young manhood. The family then moved to Maryville, Missouri and was living there and working on the David Rankin Ranch when they learned the unassigned lands were to be opened to homesteads. Billy, his father and brother made the run into the territory April 22, 1889. They crossed the South Canadian River near Purcell. He settled on a quarter section of land -- NE 1/2 of Sec. 15, 10 N 4 W -- which is now S. W. 119th and South Meridian in Oklahoma City. Billy's brother's claim was just east of his and his father settled just north of the brother's place.

As soon as Billy was sure no one else was on his claim, he plowed a furrow around the claim. Early the next morning Billy discovered that another man was on his claim. Sometimes such a situation caused bloodshed, but since both men were of a friendly nature the dispute was settled amicably as the other man moved his claim south which no one else claimed.

Billy's possessions at that time consisted of a team of horses, a wagon, a plow, a gun, some hand tools, a few cooking utensils and a trunk with his clothing, bedding and personal belongings.

His first task was to dig a well. This was done by hand--exchanging work with his relatives and neighbors. Although Billy's cash was limited he was a good hunter. The area had a great quantity of wild game--quail, prairie chicken, rabbit, as well as deer. He would kill prairie chickens, quail and rabbits, take them to Purcell and exchange them for lumber and other supplies. With these supplies he built a dugout for shelter. He did this by digging an eight by ten foot hole about three feet deep and lining it with 1 x 12 boards extending the boards about three feet above ground. The roof was made of boards and covered with soil which had been removed from the dugout. Soil was also filled in around the outside. A door and steps were placed at one end. Later he built a two-room house and until a real cellar was built, the dugout was used to store supplies that might freeze. His first crop was corn. Though Billy had been able to plow and plant but a few acres, he raised a bumper crop. As fuel was scarce and corn cheap, part of the corn was used as fuel.

Billy married Mary Elizabeth Hill (known by her family as Lizzie) February 10, 1892. She was born in Fayette, (Howard County) Missouri, November 17, 1867. Her father was Gilbert Hill and her mother was Mary Fannie Street. Lizzie's mother and father were divorced when she was about twelve years old. She had two younger brothers, William Hill and Ernest Hill. Her mother married Augustus St. Clair Garland and they moved to Cleveland County, Oklahoma, in 1890, buying a farm one mile north of the Williamson farm. She had three half brothers, Oswald, Fred Lee, and Oklay. Oklay was born in Oklahoma and was named after the Territory where he was born.

Lizzie and Billy first met at her home when her brother, Willie, brought Billy and some other young men there for water and to wash up when some of them had been thrown from some young horses they were breaking to ride. She had her own horse and side saddle and loved to ride. She played the organ and the guitar. Billy played the "fiddle" and often played for dances which were held in different peoples homes and at housewarmings. They became well acquainted and soon a wedding was planned.

Later they often told their children of their wedding. They were married in the parlor of her home, February 10, 1892. As the organ began playing, the bride and groom and the couple who was to "stand up" with them left by the back door so they could enter the parlor by the front door where the minister and guests were waiting. As they hurried around the house, Lizzie stumbled and one hand and forearm went into a rain barrel full of water. The barrel had originally been a vinegar barrel, she quickly blotted up the water with the men's handkerchiefs and proceeded to the ceremony with a slight smell of vinegar about her.

The early years of marriage were busy ones for them. Lizzie always had a large garden. They also had a small orchard. Chickens, ducks and geese were also raised for food, for sale and for feathers to make feather beds and pillows. When the fruit ripened a stove was set up in the yard to cook apple butter which was always canned in half gallon jars. There was usually a well stocked cellar of canned fruits and vegetables and the "smoke house" was kept stocked with home cured pork. Billy raised registered Shorthorn cattle which he showed at fairs and stock shows in Cleveland County. He also raised Percheron horses and had a fine Percheron stallion. The main crop was usually corn but wheat, oats and alfalfa were grown. As the boys grew up each was given a saddle horse.

As various farmers decided to leave the area, Billy was able to buy more farm land until at his death in 1925 he owned 720 acres of farm land.

He served on the school board of Fairview School and was interested in all community affairs. He helped build the Antioch Christian Church in 1902.

Billy died May 22, 1925, and was buried at Pleasant Valley Cemetery at Wheatland, Oklahoma. Lizzie died September 12, 1954, and was buried beside him.
